No. 251.

NAPLES, October 2.

WE are informed, that the king of the Two Sicilies will very ſhortly go into Calabria, in order to inform himſelf of the true ſtate of the mines that have been diſcovered in that province; that his majeſty had ſent a commiſſary to ſurvey the roads through which he was to paſs in order to give him a full account whether they were ſufficiently repaired according to his directions; that his majeſty had ordered all the communities throughout the kingdom, to give a full and true account of the ſtate of their proviſions in their reſpective diſtricts, in order that the court may know whether it be expedient or not to permit the exportation of any kind of grain.

Rome, Oct. 14. Laſt Sunday the pope, according to annual cuſtom, performed the ceremony of aſcending the holy ladder upon his knees.

Parma, Oct. 14. The preſent deliberation of the regency principally turn upon the road which the infant don Philip ſeems to deſign to make upon the confines of his territories on the ſide of the Lunegiano, for the ſake of a communication with the Eaſtern Riviero. As this would do great prejudice to the commerce which the court of Vienna propoſes to carry on from Trieſte into the countries under its dominions, if the infant duke perſiſts in the reſolution of making this road, ſome differences may poſſibly ariſe between the two ſtates. It's reported, that the congreſs which is to be held at Piſa is not only intended to regulate the reſpective confines of the powers in Italy, but to eſtabliſh the ſupreme juriſdiction of his Imperial majeſty upon all the fiefs of Italy.

Leghorn, Oct. 14. According to the laſt letters from Malta, ſince the gallies of the religion were returned to that port, it had been diſcovered, that the baſhaw of Rhodes had provided a great quantity of poiſon, which he intended to make uſe of in the execution of his horrid deſign; and the method he propoſed to take for that purpoſe was, to mix it in the aquaducts which ſupply the town with water, of which the bakers uſually make their bread. He alſo intended to have it mixed in the coffee and chocolate of the knights, the making of which being uſually left to the ſlaves, he thought it might be eaſily accompliſhed.

The baſhaw of Rhodes is ſtill cloſely confined; and as the crime is aggravated by this new diſcovery, it's thought it will be very difficult to ſave his life.

Madrid, Oct. 17. The court has reſolv'd to make an augmentation of a thouſand men to the troops which are to be ſent to the Caraccas, to puniſh the mutineers of that province for taking up arms, and driving away the agents of the company of Guipuſcoa, who were ſettled there by the king's authority.

We learn from Seville, that a regiſter ſhip is arrived there from Buenos-Ayres, with advice, that the two men of war that had the treaſure of Lima on board, were not in a condition to put to ſea for want of ſailors.

It is generally believ'd that the treaſure lately arriv'd from the Indies, will be imploy'd to purchaſe the iſland of Corſica for the infant duke of Parma; and 'tis even thought that this affair will be determined before the end of the year.

Stockholm, Oct. 21. Purſuant to the orders which the court ſent to Carelſcroon, they are diſarming the fleet in that port; and as we hear, that the ſame orders are given at Cronſtadt and Revel for diſarming the Ruſſian fleet, we look upon them as proofs that the peace of the North will be preſerved. All the preparations for tranſporting a new body of troops into Finland are countermanded, and every thing there is perfectly quiet, by the care of the Ruſſian generals to keep their troops within the bounds of their quarters.

Dantzick, Oct. 21. The affairs of the North continue to engroſs the attention of the public in theſe parts; but we don't expect to any further light into them before the baron Greiffenheim, the new Swediſh envoy, arrives at the Ruſſian court. The laſt letters from Stockholm inſinuate, that they hope that miniſter will ſucceed in his his commiſſion, as his inſtructions tend not only to remove all manner of ſuſpicion of an intention to ſubvert the preſent form of government in Sweden, but alſo to let the Ruſſian miniſtry know, that his court is diſpoſed to treat about renewing the treaties and conventions between the two crowns. As the treaty concluded in 1721 at Nyſtadt in Finland, is to be made the baſis of this renewal of treaties, and that the explications to be given concerning the maintenance of the Swediſh form of government, muſt tally with the ſeventh article, it ſeems neceſſary to lay the ſaid article before our readers, as it may be new to many of them.

Article VII. of the treaty of Nyſtadt.

Her Czariſh majeſty alſo promiſes, in the moſt ſolemn manner, not to intermeddle in the domeſtic affairs of the kingdom of Sweden, nor with the form of regency that has been unanimouſly ſettled and ſworn to by the ſtates of the kingdom; that ſhe will not give the leaſt aſſiſtance to any perſon, directly nor indirectly; but that ſhe will endeavour to hinder and prevent any thing that may be contrary thereto, provided it comes to the knowlege of her Czariſh majeſty, in order thereby to give evident proofs of a ſincere friendſhip, and of a truly good neighbour.

Bruſſels, Oct. 31. The Imperial troops ſtill continue to deſert in great numbers, notwithſtanding the precautions that are taken to prevent it, and the ſevere puniſhment that is inflicted upon the deſerters who are catch'd.

From the Paris A-la-main, Nov. 10.

It is at length abſolutely determined, that the equeſtrian ſtatute of the king ſhall be put in the ſquare of Beſſi, according to the firſt deſign, his majeſty having approved of the plan; and warning has been already given to the inhabitants of that ſquare, and the part of Dauphineſs-ſtreet, to provide themſelves with other dwellings. The owners of the houſes in theſe places will be paid for them out of the tenth penny.

Letters from Genoa, dated the 31ſt of laſt month, adviſe, that no means have yet been found out for re-eſtabliſhing the credit of the famous bank of St. George. The ſcheme which the directors would have put in execution, was to begin by paying part of the bills which were iſſued, ſuppreſſing the agio of 15 per cent. and this project every body was ready to conſent to; but ſuch conſiderable ſums were neceſſary to effect it, as were not at preſent poſſible to raiſe.

LONDON.

Sept. 16. Notwithſtanding ſo many nations are already concerned in the whale fiſhery, the inhabitants of Friedburg, in the duchy of Sleſwick, have judged that it might be worth their while to try their hands at it, and have accordingly petitioned the king of Denmark for an excluſive privilege to fiſh on the coaſt of Greenland, Spitzberg, and Davis's ſtreights, i. e. That none but ſubjects of Denmark ſhall be admitted into the company they are going to form. His majeſty, upon the eſtimate of the advantages which they think to make of this fiſhery, has granted their requeſt.

According to ſome letters from the Hague, the Dutch expect that the court of France will ſhortly take off the extraordinary duties which were laid on goods in Dutch bottoms during the war, and that nothing was wanting but the nomination of public miniſters, on both ſides, to reſtore the antient harmony between the moſt Chriſtian king and the republic; but there is a ſhort extract of a letter, publiſhed in a German paper, which runs in a different ſtrain, ſo that it cannot be amiſs to lay it before our readers.

Hague,

Hague, September 20.

"The court of France having considerably augmented the duties upon fish, and other commodities imported into that kingdom, and sent from hence; we are assured, that the states general have resolved to augment in proportion the duties of import on French wines, which are brought into the dominions of the republic: And this opinion is so general, that all persons are endeavouring to lay in what stock they are able, in order to have their vaults and cellars well replenished before the publication of the placart imposing this new duty. If such a placart should appear, as we expect it will, it will suddenly, it must abate that preference which our people hitherto gave to French wines, over those of the Rhine, the Moselle, and other parts of Germany. M. de Berkeurode, tho' nominated ambassador to the most Christian king, does not make any disposition, as if he was to depart in a short time: Nor does the court of France seem to be any more in hast to send a public minister hither."

Oct. 6. By an advise arrived in Gallicia, from the Havannah, we have an account of a man of war being put into the said place from Carthagena, with twelve millions on board, and another from Vera Cruz with six millions; their cargoes are as follows;

Silver for the king	904,295	Pieces of 8.

They are expected home this month.

An extract of a letter from Parma, dated August 16.

"The last letters which we have received from Placentia and Guastalla give advice of surprising conversions, which daily augment the number of the good subjects of the empress queen. It is not to be supposed, as people are so inclinable to changes, but that there may be in this duchy, during the late war, who had resolved, as far as in them lay, to cause an alteration in the government. They imagined, though from a bad way of reasoning, that by having a brother of the king of Spain to rule over them, they should participate with him of the treasures of the new world. Though all those who thought thus, did not think proper to discover their sentiments upon the first appearance of the infant don Philip in this city, we are thoroughly convinced, that the number of them is very considerable, and there would have been convincing proofs of it, if providence had actually given us a master that was likely to have brought back the golden age into the antient dominions of the house of Farnese. But this number, by the advice we receive from all parts, at present decreases every day. The Parmesans have met with nothing in the change that heaven has granted to their desires, but what they flattered themselves to have gained thereby. They have obtained a sovereign equally insensible to the charms of their capital, and to the flattery of their acclamations, who avoids them, in order to retire with a small retinue of foreigners to his country house, and to pursue rural diversions all the time that he is not obliged to appropriate to public affairs. Far from seeing the galleons arrive from the new world, and partaking with the Spaniards of the spoils of Peru and Mexico, they have not the satisfaction of having any share in their own spoils. Most of the posts and employments have been given to foreigners, whom providence has attached to the fortune of this prince; and the management of the revenue, the receiving of the inward and outward customs, are entrusted to French farmers, who exercise their functions with a rigour which enrages the poor Parmesans. Under the specious pretext of searching for contraband goods, they pretend, that all houses ought to be open to them; nay, they even dare to penetrate the sanctuary of convents and cloisters, to see if no tobacco, salt, or any other commodity, which has not passed through their office, be there. In short the Croats and the Pandours were angels, compared with these bloodsuckers."

An extract of a letter from Amsterdam, dated Oct. 2.

"How necessary soever it may be for his serene highness the stadtholder to enjoy some repose, he sacrifices that, and even his health and pleasure, to promote the interest of the state, (with the reins of government) which providence has entrusted him with. All who are in the administration are sensible of his application and zeal for the procuring the welfare of the provinces in general; and the most rational people, who have no share in the government, and are not guided in their judgments by any particular view, publicly render him the same justice. The common people have likewise the same sentiments of admiration, esteem and affection, that they had for him from the beginning. There are indeed, a sett of people, who professe to speak and think, in regard to his serene highness, as the above; But at the same time, that they affect to say all the good of him imaginable, they accompany their elogies with a But, and thereby betray the real sentiments of their hearts. They complain that the prince stadtholder has not yet composed his council of persons like himself, and insinuate that three or four of them are at least useless, to say no worse of them. In short they manifestly prove, by their discourse, that they are neither real friends to the ministers of his serene highness, nor to his serene highness himself."

ANNAPOLIS.

We hear by an Express from Virginia, of the melancholy News of the Ship Diamond, Capt. Tweits, bound from hence for London, foundering and sinking at Sea, having made about half her Passage. The Captain and thirteen others, amongst whom were Mr. Paris and his Wife, Passengers, betook themselves to the Long-Boat; and the rest of the Crew to the Pinnace. Fourteen Days after, the Long Boat was happily discovered by a Ship, which took them all in, and brought them into Virginia; but 'tis not known what became of the Pinnace and her Company, who were ten in Number.

On the 14th Instant one Charles Howard, a young Man, was kill'd by the Fall of a Tree, near the Fork of Patuxent.

We had yesterday a violent Storm of Snow; and in the Evening one John Pursley, a Staymaker on the North Side of Severn, going home from a Wedding, lost himself within a few Yards of a House, and was this Morning found dead.
